Editor's Letter

Hello and welcome to the second edition of Britain, My Nation, the bi-monthly magazine published in support of and to publicise British Nationalism. Particular thanks are due to those who have subscribed and also those who have contacted me. Such positive but humbling feedback highlights the fact that there is an audience out there with an appetite to fight against those who are intent on the destruction of our race and nation. I will make no apologies for repeating what I wrote in edition 1 and that is THERE IS STILL TIME!

Since the last issue the Nationalist movement has had some good news and some bad news and there has also been some interesting news. The good news is that two parties have successfully registered as political parties with the electoral commission allowing them to contest elections. Some will say this is not good news as it further complicates the pool of Nationalist parties available and this is a valid point. However, the fact that both the Homeland Party and the National Rebirth Party have registered is evidence that, by applying correctly, even Nationalist parties can register, so that is good news!

The bad news is that another Nationalist, Sam Melia, has been wrongly imprisoned (for more on this and the following story see In The News on pages 4 & 5). The interesting news was the election to Parliament of George Galloway, standing in Rochdale primarily it seems on a pro-Gaza ticket.

All of this suggests that 2024 will be a very interesting year politically, as we head towards a general election later in the year. Hopefully, those Nationalist parties intending on standing candidates will be working together to ensure they do not compete against each other and cause the Nationalist vote to be split. Sadly, at this time, I think that no such pact will be agreed between civic and racial Nationalist parties as there is too much suspicion within the leadership of each side regarding motives. That position makes the aims for publishing this magazine all the more difficult, but I believe that there are many good patriots who do believe we can work together and so we will continue to encourage unification and also to bring back into the fold those who have given up on our cause.

Britain, My Nation will only be available by post on subscription and not via the internet or by email. Articles, letters, newspaper cuttings, and general comments for potential inclusion in future editions are welcomed, (but please include your name, although if so desired this will be withheld), and these can be sent by email to: - britainmynation@yahoo.com

by post to: - The Editor, Britain, My Nation, 10 Washpool, SWINDON, Wiltshire, SN5 3PN

Britain, My Nation can only be taken forward with help and support of our readers, the like-minded Nationalists within our community and I thank you again for your support.

In the News

So, the bad news in Nationalism is that SAM MELIA has been IMPRISONED. Melia a leading activist with Patriotic Alternative and husband of deputy leader, Laura Towler, was arrested in April 2021, He was subsequently sentenced, on the 1st March this year, to two years in prison for sharing anti-immigration stickers, printed on which were slogans such as "It's OK To Be White" and "Love Your Nation". The prosecution even admitted that the stickers were both lawful and truthful but, nevertheless, sentencing Judge Tom Bayliss KC said "The publication of this kind of material is corrosive to our society" after Melia was found guilty of inciting racial hatred and encouraging racially aggravated criminal damage. For these "crimes" the sentencing guidelines gave the judge the option of between 2 and 6 years, with the minimum being given, though this could have been suspended. However the judge said he wanted the sentence to act as a deterrent to other people with the same beliefs. In 2017 Bayliss sentenced a paedophile to an 8-month suspended sentence for possessing child abuse material and this imbalance in the sentencing guidelines highlights how farcical they are. There is a warning here to others, in that, whatever you believe and know to be true, it is not necessarily going to save you from prosecution and imprisonment if the powers that be don't like it!

Interesting news recently was the ELECTION OF GEORGE GALLOWAY as MP for Rochdale. Galloway was standing for the Workers Party of Britain and won almost 40% of the vote overturning a Labour majority of 9,668. The Israel-Hamas war dominated the campaign and in his election speech he said "Keir Starmer, this is for Gaza…". Whilst campaigning it seemed that Galloway surrounded himself with Muslims, and with almost 40% of the population of Rochdale residents being Muslim I am sure we can guess from where his core vote came. Of course, the subsequent fallout was huge causing an absolute storm in Westminster, to the extent that Prime Minister Sunak was forced to make a statement suggesting that extremism won't be tolerated. However, in his statement Sunak suggested that the 'far right', as well as Nick Griffin, ex-BNP leader, who he mentioned, were as much of a danger as is Islamism.

On the back of both of items above came the STATEMENT ON EXTREMISM given to Parliament by Michael GOVE, the Secretary of State for Levelling Up, Housing and Communities (whatever that might mean!). In his statement he attempted to define extremism as mentioned by Sunak in his speech days before. The general public would have automatically assumed this as referring to the threat of Islamic terrorism, but Gove specifically mentioned both the British National Socialist Movement and Patriotic Alternative as examples of "extremist" groups to be covered by the new definition. It is plain for us all to see that the government is extremely unhappy that the "far right" exists and that our movement is gaining traction as a result of the influx of illegal immigrants and their five star treatment, so it is worrying what their end-game might be. It has already been rumoured that Patriotic Alternative will soon be going the same way as National Action and be proscribed, however the government should realise that by doing so may force part of the movement underground and this will be more difficult to control.

Despite some worrying news on the previous page there is more good news for the Nationalist movement and that is an ELECTION SUCCESS FOR THE BRITISH DEMOCRATS. Ken Perrin is now a councillor representing the Slade Lode South Ward on Chatteris Town Council, in Cambridgeshire, after taking an impressive 47.52% of the vote defeating both Labour and Independent candidates. The result shows that the commitment to community-based politics as espoused by serious Nationalist parties is proving successful. The time for faceless career politicians, who trade off of the back of once successful political parties is now over, as the electorate are waking up to the fact that those politicians only represent themselves and minority interests and that there are politicians who DO want to actually make a difference to communities. Congratulations are due to the British Democrats and Britain, My Nation look forward to more political successes for our movement in the coming year and thereafter.

For the final item in this issue's In The News we remember KRISS DONALD who was brutally murdered in Glasgow, on the 15th March 2004, just over 20 years ago. This was not just a straight-forward murder, 15 year old Kriss was kidnapped, then viciously stabbed, tortured and set on fire by a Pakistani gang in a racially motivated attack. Mention Stephen Lawrence to the general public and everyone will know who that is, mention Kriss Donald and the vast majority will not have a clue! Whilst Lawrence and his family have received wall-to-wall media coverage, the case of Kriss Donald was virtually ignored and the lack of media coverage caused some condemnation as a result. The BBC was criticised as the case featured on the national news only three times. Peter Fahy, one time spokesman on race issues, for the Association of Chief Police Officers, said that "it was a fact that it was harder to get the media interested where murder victims were young white men". Most of us in the Nationalist community will recall what happened to Kriss and the outrage we all felt at the time and took some degree of satisfaction when 4 of the 5 man gang were convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment despite them fleeing to Pakistan beforehand (the fifth gave evidence against 3 of the others convicted and was released early). Recently this case has found itself back in the news, being reported that one of the murderers, Daanish Zahid, could soon be eligible for parole.

There are many white victims of racist murders and along with Kriss Donald, the names Ross Parker, Richard Everitt, Gavin Hopley and Lee Rigby immediately come to mind amongst many more. This list will undoubtedly become longer as we continue to import huge numbers of immigrants who do not care nor respect our culture and traditions. Our movement is here to ensure the continuity of that culture and those traditions and to remember that lives have been lost because of the push for a failed multi-cultural society. WE must never forget that nor those that have died.

Short Book Review – On The Cusp – Days of '62

by David Kynaston, Published by Bloomsbury Publishing

Coming in at 240 pages, this volume is much shorter than the other books in this excellent historical series, intended ultimately to cover the years 1945-1979, with all other books in the series covering 6-7 years each. However, Kynaston sees 1962 as a pivotal year in post-war twentieth century history, hence this being the midway point in the series, on the basis of specific events that occurred, not least of which was the beginning of the road to fame for the Beatles (see article on pages 8-9), and the introduction of the Commonwealth Immigration Act amongst others.

I can agree that it was a pivotal year, but do not agree it to be a celebratory event on the basis that the increased liberalism which began its gradual introduction at that time and continued throughout the sixties has led to many of the societal problems we are now faced with. Kynaston doesn't provide a chronological historical account of the years about which he writes, but includes extracts from diaries, newspapers, TV listings and sports fixtures, creating a "vast multi-coloured tapestry, depicting almost every conceivable aspect of our national life". Much of what he writes is insightful and interesting from a mainstream history perspective and also from the point of view of those drifting along with their day to day existences. However, occasionally, and particularly in this book, he writes with a modern take on those events with a twenty-first century politically correct point of view. This comes as no surprise considering that Kynaston was a student at the London School of Economics in the early 1970s.

This approach can be seen particularly in chapter 5, 'Brothers and Friends', where he devotes a disproportionate number of pages to describe the lives of some of the new immigrants prior to them achieving, what in most cases, were unremarkable feats in later life. For example, Norwell Roberts, arriving from Anguilla in 1956, who was dropped on his head by fellow pupils wanting to see the colour of his blood, who after working as a lab technician went on to become the Met's first black police officer. The chapter also discusses the experiences of black workers in industry and provides details of the reactions of the existing workforce, along with the social, racial unrest of the time. All of this must have been challenging for those involved but in my opinion were not massive influences on the change in social history at the time. The implication from this being that 1962 was a pivotal year in terms of the imposition of a so-called multi-cultural society that we now have and its' associated problems, although I disagree it was a pivotal year.

Other chapters in the book are interesting because they do actually discuss how the social changes of that year impacted on the British people. The diary extracts provide a sense of what 1962 was like to live through, with events considered of major import by the main-stream media seemingly met with disinterest, in many cases, by the diarists.

Overall, for those with an interest in modern British history this book and the others in the series are a highly recommended read and a refreshing slant on our times.

How Do We Save Our Decaying Country?

In issue 1 of Britain, My Nation I discussed some of my experiences in witnessing the decay of the very fabric of our country, with an emphasis on Bournemouth. In this continuing series of articles I will outline what we, as a people and a nation need to do to rectify this, after providing some detail as to the problems we currently have.

For time immemorial it seems that governments have attempted to deal with the problems they face on a fire-fighting basis - there is a problem, people are unhappy, fire some money at it, fix it on a temporary basis and move on. Little seems to be done to address the root cause, probably because governments work on short term solutions to curry favour with the electorate. They are too afraid that by creating longer term and more effective solutions it will damage their popularity. A longer term solution is the better option but will cause some pain whilst necessary measures are put in place.

The over-arching problem this country has is that, over the last 70 years or so, those who control our destiny have attempted to manage, to "fix", our problems by importing cheap foreign labour. Those who advocate mass immigration as the solution to our problems tend to highlight "the fact" that the NHS would not have survived without it. I totally disagree with this and will discuss my reasons for that later in this series.

I have a strong belief that the root of most of the problems we have in Britain stem from importing those whose traditions and culture are vastly at odds with or own and so our starting point in attempting to save our decaying country is to stop all immigration. This needs to be swiftly followed by repatriating those who should not be here and stopping all overseas aid. Then we can begin investing in our own people. British tax-payers are sick and tired of knowing their tax money is spent on those who hold no allegiance to this land of ours or our people, and want it to be spent on helping their own fellow-countrymen.

We need to take a serious look at society as a whole and ensure our foremost concern is in encouraging the return to the traditional family model, this being the basis of a strong and cohesive society and so we need to encourage and incentivise our people to have families. Sadly the chattering, liberal-left classes consider this as wrong and continue their misguided efforts to destroy this model in favour of any number of weird notions of what they believe the family unit should be. Their misconceived ideas and world view have also contributed to the problems we face in society today. Because those types seem to have forgotten, they need to be reminded that it is an absolutely natural function of the human species to reproduce to maintain our existence on this planet in exactly the same way as all other species do. It is their primary function. Just because we are the most civilized of all species and can make decisions does not mean that the main human function can be disregarded on the basis that, for example, a career comes first! We need to re-educate our people away from their materialistic, self-centred ways and back towards the family-orientated society we once were.

In future issues we will continue to develop this theme and measures necessary for taking control of our society, to ensure it functions optimally and on a self-sufficient basis, thereby giving us back our self-respect and a pride in being British once more.

The Legacy of The Beatles – 1

Throughout their career The Beatles pushed the boundaries regarding what was socially acceptable and what previously was not. From the early days they were seemingly challenging the establishment, initially by growing their hair longer than was generally acceptable and later in their career, dressing very differently, and so certainly leading the field in terms of music and fashion. Massive social change occurred as a result of the 'pop' revolution of the 1960's and although it could be argued that the introduction of 'rock 'n' roll' in the mid 1950's was where it began, I would suggest this was only the lighting of the fuse for the massive explosion of change that followed. At the beginning of the 1960's, society was generally divided into two categories, you were either an adult or a child. Adults were employed in work and children were at school. When the time came for children to leave school, they seemingly transformed overnight from school-children into workers, therefore adults. They almost immediately turned into their parents in that they took on the responsibility for obtaining a job and, within a short time, getting married and having a family. As the 1960's progressed this general social norm was challenged and a new category came to the fore, that of the teenager.

When the Beatles arrived on the scene the public assumed they were good, clean-cut working class lads which gave them a form of universal acceptance particularly achieving success after originating from humble backgrounds. However this is only partly true as although there were family problems which caused trauma in their lives, they didn't all come from poor families. The parents of John Lennon separated when he was an infant, Paul McCartney's mother died when he was 14, Ringo Starr (real name Richard Starkey) was a very sickly child whose education suffered as a result and although George Harrison came from council house stock, his early days were actually good.

All of the Beatles came from families in which music seemed to play a big part, with instruments in the house or being bought as presents for them as children. In the late 40s/early 50s the public in general were still suffering the aftermath of the Second World War with rationing still in place, so instruments would have been quite a luxury for most.

Lennon, McCartney and Harrison came together forming the Quarrymen in the 1950's and Starr only joined them in the Beatles in the early 1960s. Their subsequent climb to stardom is well-documented. During the period 1962 to 1970 the impact they had on society was phenomenal. The early 60s was the period the Beatles appeared to be the type of chap a girl could take home to meet her parents. However, in the early days they were taking drugs to help with the pressures of their hard working schedule. Their use of recreational drugs started in 1965, and by then they were such a national institution they were awarded MBE's. The drug-taking may well have been the turning point in terms of their somewhat less than conventional appearance and attitude to the social norms, as their hair grew longer and their clothing started it's change from the smart suits to the then less conventional attire. Their previously respectful attitude changed to one that was more anti-establishment and controversial, with, for example, in March 1966, John Lennon stating that the Beatles were more popular than Jesus Christ.

The Legacy of The Beatles – 2

Because of the outrage Lennon did say that it was not intended to cause offence and apologised, but it marked the beginning of the Beatles becoming more outspoken. At this time their music also changed, from standard love songs, such as, 'I Want To Hold Your Hand' and 'She Loves You' to a more negative style such as 'Nowhere Man' and 'Taxman' with social and political commentary starting to filter into the lyrics.

Harrison became interested in the religions of the mystical East, McCartney happily plodded along absorbed in his music and Starr with his drumming. Lennon however became more radical in his outlook. As a group the Beatles influenced each other, the hairstyles became even longer, clothes more hippy-orientated and drug-taking increased. Lennon first met Yoko Ono, an avant-garde, experimental artist, in 1966, whilst married to his first wife Cynthia. Ono's influence on Lennon must not be under-estimated and, in the view of many, she played a major part in the breakdown of the relationship the Beatles had with each other and their ultimate split.

With their music being so popular amongst teenagers and others, the influence the Beatles had on society was immense. Everyone wanted a part of what the Beatles seemingly stood for – the freedom to do what you want and with whom. Social attitudes changed with teenagers speaking out against everything and anything they felt they had a grievance with. The Beatles challenged the social norms and so gave their fans and others the green light to do the same.

Towards the end of their careers as a group the Beatles become more outspoken and the earlier forays into social and political comment seemed small compared to what was to come. The song 'All You Need Is Love' became an anthem of the peace movement although Lennon admitted that that because of his inability to control his emotions he used to hit out physically, at both men and women, so not much peace and love there it seems. In 1969 Lennon and Ono spent their honeymoon on a bed-in for peace attracting the ridicule of the world's media. After the Beatles, whilst the others concentrated on their music, Lennon took it upon himself to address the problems of the world, in songs such as, 'Give Peace A Chance' and 'Power To The People'. The early 70's saw him express support for the IRA after Bloody Sunday and rumours persisted he had even funded them with McCartney writing the song 'Give Ireland Back To The Irish', although this was seen as more of a stunt than a political statement. Lennon was also being watched by the security services in the USA due to his sympathies with the International Marxist Group, with the FBI admitting they had nearly 300 pages of files on him.

Being a brief article the full story remains to be told but it can be seen from the few examples given that the Beatles were instrumental in causing the public, particularly the young, to rebel against the social norms that had existed and by doing so allowed a liberal-left agenda to permeate our society and be responsible for the many social problems that we are faced with today.

Which Nationalist Party? (1 of 3)

This is the 2nd in the series which provides information on the, as far as we are aware, 17 (an increase of 2) racial and civic (or populist) Nationalist parties that are available in this country for us to join. The intention of this series is to provide reader's with adequate information to enable them to judge who best to support depending on their own political views. Ultimately it is hoped that many of those listed will put aside minor and petty differences to join with others, thereby strengthening our cause and our appeal to the British public and giving us more hope that we can be competitive in the political arena. The parties will be listed in alphabetical order for ease of reference and so not to appear favouring one over the other.

In this issue we list the contact details for each party – social media platforms can be found via the website addresses quoted. In future we will be comparing the policy platforms on which they stand and the next issue will feature details on membership requirements. Also in future issues, as a separate item, we will be giving a platform to personalities from any of the listed party's, so contact us if you would like to be involved.

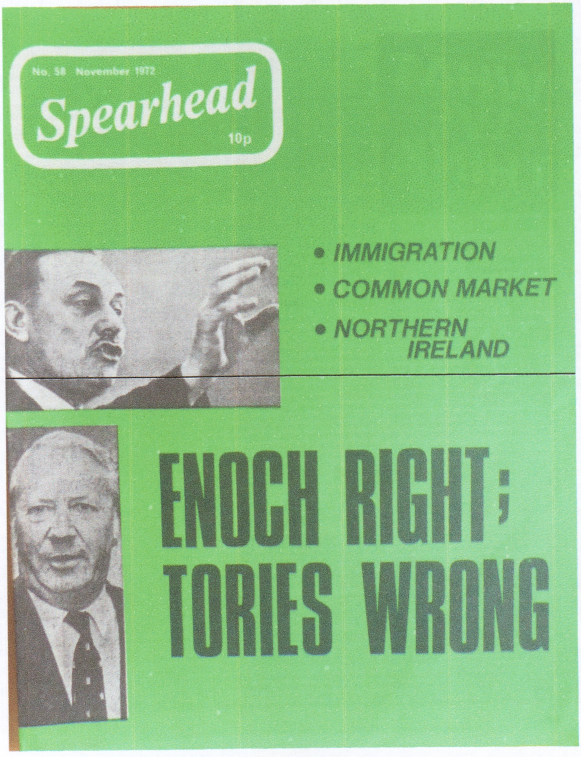
The Best of Spearhead Magazine – November 1972 (1)

This feature has met with a very positive response and so I am pleased to continue using these pages as a tribute to Spearhead magazine and its founder and main editor John Tyndall. This monthly feature includes extracts from the best Nationalist magazine I have had the pleasure of subscribing to. As I re-read the older editions I am often surprised with how the items have so much relevancy to conditions that we are faced with today. It seems that the warnings of the past were foolishly unheeded and had attention been given to what was being said at that time and the predictions made, then we would not be faced with the destruction of all that we hold dear now.

In issue 1 I incorrectly stated that Spearhead was published from 1967 to 2005 when in fact issue 1 came out in 1964. I trust the reader will continue to enjoy The Best of Spearhead as much as I have done when researching and reproducing the items. In this edition of Britain My Nation we look at Spearhead issue number 58 from November 1972, just 51 years ago! Apologies for the size of the print, a good magnifying glass will help if struggling!



WHY BRITAIN NEEDS THE N.F.

The following is an abridged version of the speech given by National Front Chairman John Tyndall to the NF AGM on October 14th.

Mr. Chairman, Fellow members of the National Front . . .

Our conference takes place this year with the echoes from the old party conferences fresh in our ears, and if ever one doubted the urgent need for our movement in Britain today those doubts would be ended simply by reading the reports from Blackpool this week and a week ago. Blackpool showed how remote are the leaders of Conservative and Labour from the real problems confronting this country in 1972 and beyond and from the grass roots feeling of ordinary men and women in the country.

To some people it is a surprise that this remoteness should exist. Doesn't it pay the politicians to listen to the people? Isn't that where their power comes from? Isn't that what our democracy is all about?

But we should not be surprised – because we, I hope, make it our business to know something about the real powers that shape the political world today. What we know tells us that all the paraphernalia of modern democracy – elections, party conferences, the so-called 'free press' – are simply one big charade designed to kid the people that they have a voice in the nation's affairs, while the real decisions that affect their lives are made miles above their heads and miles beyond their control.

What a deception the whole thing is! At the Labour Party Conference we had that scion of the latter day aristocracy, Tony Wedgewood-Benn closing the proceedings by talking about "our working class movement". To the right of him and to the left of him, in front of him and to the rear of him, bristled the gold watch-chains, pearl necklaces and big cigars of entrenched wealth. Up and down the hall – the contented grins and ample paunches of those who've grown fat on socialism: tycoon publishers, literati, whizz-kids of the entertainment industry, big time financiers and property-dealers, chain-store merchants and import wholesalers; they were all there – sharpening their swords for the working class struggle. What a fraud! What a racket! What a farce!

This week we've had the other crowd. I call them the men of surrender and the men of broken promises. The word 'surrender' ought to be written large right across the banner of the Tory Party. Surrender to the I.R.A. Surrender to General Amin. Surrender to industrial hooliganism.

As for broken promises, you name it – they've broken it. The promise to stop rising prices. The promise to put an end to industrial war. The promise to curb immigration. The promise not to go into Europe without full-hearted consent of Parliament and people. All these promises were made before the Tories were elected in 1970. All these promises have now been thrown into the dustbin. Whatever the party at Blackpool, the spirit is the same: political dishonesty and and contempt for the people.

SIX YEARS CAMPAIGNING

We in this movement have campaigned hard for six years to put our case across to the public of Britain, and this case has not merely been a case for new policies – but a case for a new party to carry them out. This second thing has perhaps been the hardest fight that we have had. For every hundred people who could be made to agree with the general spirit of what we've been saying, perhaps no more than one or two could be persuaded of the necessity for the National Front as a party. The rest would go away convinced that in the parties of their fathers and grandfathers, the parties of the old establishment, things could be put right, given time and good faith. The hardest thing to bring home to these people was the fact that those parties were not merely suffering from the influence of wrong ideas and wrong policies, but were deeply rotten at the very core in the spirit that gripped them and the men that ran them. I see all the signs now that this fact is starting to drive home and that the people are looking for real change.

Whether this change comes, or whether people simply continue to dream about it, depends in the end on the quality of our movement.

Looking about the country over the last year, I have the feeling that in some parts we are very well organised and very effective while in other parts we are disorganised and not very effective. Sometimes people simply lack the guts, the perseverance, the drive and the staying power to overcome obstacles. I have a message for these people: I started to become embroiled in political work about 15 years ago, and since then I have not stopped. I have seen times of the greatest failure and frustration in the promotion of our cause. I can recall years ago when it was considered a good turn-out to get 50 people on a march or to a meeting. I remember demonstrations on which we got people intwos and threes. I remember shouting my lungs out on cold and lonely street corners to crowds of no more than half a dozen people, making no impression at all and then coming home afterwards, tired and depressed, sinking into a chair and wondering – what could we do to get better results? What could we do to wake people up? I remember looking through members' lists and counting them in tens, instead of thousands, and thinking to myself: Heavens! How weak and small we are! Can we ever succeed?

INDOMITABLE WILL

Today we may still be a long way from our goal. But when I see the size of the marches, the demonstrations and the meetings that we can put on, when I see the quantity of our literature going out, when I look at the records that show the numbers of our members, I'm struck with how far we have come from those earlier days. I'm struck with the feeling that the advancement which we've made and the victories that we've won are due to the indomitable will of just a few people, who in the darkest of times never gave up the struggle.

There is an important thing that we must do in the coming year, and I am reminded of this particularly by the reports from Blackpool. It is to underline very clearly that we are not – as some might believe – merely a more militant form of the right wing of the Tory Party. We are not Tories or Conservatives; we are Nationalists – and if anyone believes that one is the same as the other he does not understand Nationalism.

One of the first principles of the Nationalist's creed is his belief in the unity of the nation, and and not just one part of it distinguished by class interest. Nationalists absolutely repudiate the idea, implied in all the pronouncements of the Tory Right, that workers in trade unions represent an interest that is contrary to the interests of the nation as a whole. We absolutely repudiate the idea that it is simply upon the 'workers' that the blame for existing troubles in industry should rest. No remedy for those troubles, and therefore no national unity, will ever come from encouraging a polarity of attitudes and interests between workers in unions and middle class – which is and always has been the essence of Toryism, whether of left, right or centre.

Just as strongly must we emphasise that as much as we are opposed to Labourite socialism, so are we equally opposed to Tory capitalism – which only serves to destroy the economic sovereignty of this country and place its great industries in bondage to international finance. And lest it be thought that in this I am splitting hairs – as someone the other day suggested – let us remind ourselves that at the real apex of the pyramid of world power these two things – monopoly capitalism and collectivist socialism – amount to the same thing, the placing of all sovereignty into the hands of a small cosmopolitan clique dedicated to the destruction of nations and of civilisation as we know it. Let us not forget – and let us point out to those in the Tory Party who agree with us on such things as immigration, law and order, the Common Market, permissiveness, obscenity, drug-taking, softness in Northern Ireland and so on, that the things that they don't like and we don't like would not exist were they not consciously and deliberately promoted by the wielders of Money Power, and that therefore no economic system that does not fundamentally challenge and upset this basis of International Money Power can succeed in righting the many wrongs in our country, economic and otherwise.

PAID PUPPETS OF ESTABLISHMENT

International Money Power brings me to end these words as I began – by underlining again the fact that it is not the parties of Blackpool who are really the masters of our affairs. The Heaths and the Wilsons of this world are nothing more than the paid puppets, employed to dance and posture on the stage of politics to maintain the delusion that we have political alternatives – whereas in them we have none; that we have a free choice whereas in all the major things the choosing is done for us. Let us never overestimate the importance of these squalid little men, who tell lies and break promises, who jump from one policy to another, like sparrows looking for the biggest crust of bread. Let us understand the real power that we fight, which not only embraces the three old political parties but the whole gigantic complex of mass media and international finance that goes with them and stands above them, and let us understand that the price of not fighting it will be slavery for us all.

The only real alternative in this country is this movement – whatever its present weaknesses and faults, whatever the limitations of its power. Our movement shows in all that it has done over six years, that it has the vitality and the will to endure and to overcome every obstacle that may be placed in its way. In the millions of our countrymen desperately looking for a political lead, we now have a chance to march forward and carry with us a great tide of national sentiment that can sweep Britain.

SACRIFICE AND STRUGGLE

For ourselves, let us be grateful that we live in times that demand from us the greatest qualities of sacrifice and struggle. Let us be glad that we're not doomed to sit still and be spectators in the extinction of all that we know and love; let us be glad that we have the means to act and fight to create a better future. Let us rejoice that fate has called us from out of the passive, dull, grey mass to live lives of great challenge and great purpose. Let us be happy that we're privileged to be alive in an age of great decision – not an age of comfort or 'safety first' but an age of adventure which beckons us to pit our strength against the elements of history, and scale again the greatest heights of British achievement in the making of a new land and a new nation, which our children can inherit with pride, with honour and with hope!

NF makes big impact in Blackburn

OVER 600 MARCHERS paraded through the streets of Blackburn, Lancs, on Saturday September 30th, in support of a National Front protest against the influx of Uganda Asians. The march ended with a rousing meeting at the Regency Hall in the centre of the town.

The day's activity was supported by 100 members from the South of England and about another 100 who travelled from the Midlands and Yorkshire by coaches. The remainder were local Lancashire people, and their numbers were a startling indication of the growth of the NF in the Lancs area.

About 500 hooligans belonging to extreme left-wing organisations were imported into the town for the purpose of physically stopping the march and meeting. This they dismally failed to do, although left-wing papers in the days following pathetically tried to write up their defeat as a victory. Some violent scuffles occurred as a result of continual provocation by these elements and in the end about a dozen of them were arrested.

The meeting that followed the march was the biggest and liveliest ever held by the NF outside London. After speeches by Activities Organiser Martin Webster, N. England Organiser Walter Barton and National Chairman John Tyndall, with contributions from guest speakers, the Dowager Lady Birdwood, Jim Merrick, of the British Campaign to Stop Immigration and local Conservative Mr. Kingsley Reed, the meeting ended in a blaze of enthusiasm with a magnificent £300 collection.

The activity received widespread national TV publicity and extensive press coverage in the North of England. It entirely dominated the correspondence columns of the Lancashire Evening Telegraph for the next few days, with letters pouring in mostly in support of the NF and condemning the hooligans of the Left.

As a result of the success of the meeting, the Labour-controlled Blackburn Council has attempted to ban the NF from further use of the hall, and this caused a widely publicised walkout from a Council meeting by members from the other parties.

Big NF recruitment in Lancashire has followed these events.

PC - Making A Monkey Of Us All

As time marches on it seems that the barrage of nonsense purporting to be a more sensitive and respectful manner of communicating increases. Unfortunately the British people seem unable or unwilling to challenge this nonsense for fear of being belittled or 'cancelled' by the liberal left who, despite being extremely small in number, seem to infiltrate the establishment and have very loud voices! At Britain My Nation we believe that all examples of this rubbish needs challenging and we will highlight some of the examples brought to our attention and hopefully, eventually, we will all see this abuse of our language and freedom of speech as being the total nonsense it actually is. Further examples of the madness seen in recent years will be published in each edition of Britain My Nation and readers are invited to send in examples they may have seen (for contact details see page 3).

EGGS – Police in London were told by their chiefs that they could no longer refer to people as a "good egg" or a "bad egg". They were informed that this could be construed to be racist (I fail to understand how?!)

UNACCEPTABLE LANGUAGE - Hull City Council issued a guide to its staff regarding language that was acceptable and unacceptable. Words such as 'pet', 'dear', 'duck', 'love', 'infirm', 'elderly' and 'senior citizen' were all deemed unacceptable.

UNION JACK – A lady who put a tiny Union Jack sticker, which she had peeled from an apple, over the EU flag on her driving licence was told that she could face prosecution for defacing Government property.

MERSEY TUNNEL – The signs on the Mersey Tunnel were changed from 'Manned' and 'Unmanned' to 'Staffed' and 'Unstaffed' in case they upset women.

PLOUGHPERSON – The invitation for a fund-raising event advised those attending could come along and share a 'Ploughperson's Lunch'.

NEGATIVE SIGNAGE – A school in Sutton changed the signs in the corridors from 'No Running' and 'No Shouting' to 'Please Walk' and 'Please Speak Quietly' as the original signs were thought to have a negative effect on the children.

And so it goes on … more examples needed please!

A Time In History

This regular feature lists some events in British history which took place on dates during the months covered by this publication.

April

1st 1947 – The school leaving age is raised to 15.

2nd 1982 – The Falklands War begins; Argentine forces invade and capture the Falkland Islands.

2nd 1946 – The Royal Military Academy is established at Sandhurst, after being at Woolwich since 1741.

3rd 1981 – The first day of a week long period of race riots in London.

5th 1909 – The Aerial League of the British Empire is founded to promote British supremacy in the air.

6th 1960 – Dr Richard Beeching is chosen to head the team to rationalize the rail network; this process results in the closure of a great many branch lines, with far-reaching social effects.

14th 1931 – The first Highway Code is issued.

30th 1985 – Britain's first black bishop, the Venerable Wilfred Wood is appointed.

May

1st 1851 – The Great Exhibition at Crystal Palace in Hyde Park, the first world fair, is opened by Queen Victoria.

3rd 1985 – An epidemic in Stafford is identified as Legionnaire's Disease; 30 people die.

5th 1980 – SAS troops storm the Iranian Embassy, freeing the hostages taken by armed men during a siege starting five days earlier.

6th 1840 – The first adhesive postage stamps (Penny Black and Two pence Blue) are introduced.

12th 1820 – The hospital reformer Florence Nightingale is born in Florence.

14th 1650 – Parliament votes in favour of the death penalty for adultery, but the law is never implemented.

19th 1898 – William Ewart Gladstone, four times Prime Minister, dies at Hawarden Castle in North Wales aged 88.

26th 1703 – Samuel Pepys dies at Clapham, aged 80.

Dear Editor

I enjoyed your summary of the Nationalist parties currently in existence but must take issue regarding the inclusion of the BNP, now in the eyes of most Nationalists as not worthy of inclusion in any such list due to it's blatant money-making stance and non-existent political activity. You also failed to include Patria in your list. Other than those issues the magazine was a thoroughly enjoyable read and I look forward to the next issue.

Yours sincerely, Adam H. Bristol.

(Editor's reply – firstly thank you again for your subscription. I included the BNP as they are still registered with the Electoral Commission as a political party albeit a dormant one and it may be there are members/supporters of the party who read the magazine and then can see alternatives are available. With regards Patria, although a small and localised party I have now included them in this issue, as I have the National Rebirth Party – who have recently registered with the Electoral Commission)

Dear Robert

Congratulations on putting the magazine together, I did not realise there were so many Nationalist parties. It is very much a divided space and you are quite right to work for unification, the main ideological divide being that of civic or an ethno Nationalist foundation as your world view and I am an advocate of the latter. Either world view would work when it comes to the primarily important task of stopping immigration. Further policy re. repatriation etc. would depend on the stronger ethno beliefs, of course, but that is further down the road.

Yours sincerely, Pete, Cornwall.

Dear Sirs

I am seeking the assistance of your readership as I investigate the finances of the British National Party. It seems that despite the party being non-functional they are still receiving and seeking funds via wills and bequests as well as a recent "begging letter" from party chairman Adam Walker. If any reader has been involved in any donation to the party in any way and believes they were misled then please contact me c/o Britain, My Nation. All replies will be treated in the strictest confidence.

Yours faithfully, N.C. c/o BMN.
